

I am very concerned about the use of cellular phones on commercial aircraft during flight. As a professional flight attendant, it is my responsibility to ensure the safety of all passengers onboard. I am concerned that during an emergency, when it is necessary to dispense critical information to passengers, that phone use would endanger, not only the user, but surrounding passengers, preventing them from hearing critical instruction.

Without question, cellular phones should never be allowed to be used during any phase of flight or during ground movement of an aircraft.

Thank you,
